Frequently Asked Questions

1. Is my student ready for Middle School English?

Your student is ready for the class if they can do the following:

- read at a 5th grade level
- identify the parts of speech
- recognize the difference between a sentence and a fragment
- follow multi-step instructions
- manage the weekly workload of a multi-part class

If they don't have the above skills yet, it doesn't mean they can't take the class. It means that the homeschool parent(s) will need to step in to work with the student at home during the week, both in academic skills and/or organizational skills. I can help parents facilitate that if requested.

2. Is Middle School English hard?

MS English is not hard; however, it is a lot of work. A student, possibly with parental help, needs to be able to

- keep track of what is due and when it's due (a syllabus will be provided)
- break down the week's assignment into manageable pieces
- be responsible for turning in work completely, correctly, and on time
- keep an organized binder – there is a LOT of paper instructions, samples, examples, and notes given. Lack of organization is the #1 reason some students struggle in MS English.

3. Does my student need to work on their own?

Yes, but...

While I do not allow students to share the workload, answers, etc., I would encourage students to study together for exams when possible, and I believe at the middle school level it's essential for parents to step in and work with their student to shore up any holes in their academic knowledge or to manage the workload. Looking at your student's graded work each week when they bring it home and regularly checking GradeBookWizard can help you assess how much help your student needs at home. And you can always ask me.
